Year A – The Gospel According to St Matthew

It being Year A of the 3-year liturgical cycle, our Gospel Readings this year will be principally from St Matthew's Gospel. We can be attentive to its main themes as we hear the Gospel readings over the course of the year.

EVANGELION = GOOD NEWS = GOSPEL

- The four Gospels are our main sources for the life and ministry of Jesus. For some decades after Jesus' Death and Resurrection (most likely in AD 33) his life and teaching were especially communicated by the oral preaching and teaching of the disciples, but gradually this was also given written form.
- Our word 'gospel' is from Old English 'god-spell', that simply means 'Good News'. This translates the Greek word evangelion (eu = 'good', angelion = 'message').
- This word originally referred, not to the four accounts by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, but to the whole message and salvation that Jesus brought. Thus, in today's reading we hear that Jesus was 'proclaiming the Good News (evangelion) of the kingdom'. (Mt 4:23) Similarly, Jesus is reported by Mark as 'proclaiming the Good News of God, and saying, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God has come near; repent and believe in the Good News (evangelio)"'. (Mk 1:14-15) St Paul's letters have a similar usage.
- It is in the 2nd century that we find the term being applied also to the actual writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, whom today we term 'evangelists'.

AUTHORSHIP

- None of the four canonical Gospels actually names in its text who its own author is. Our source for this information is the testimony of the early Church.
- The earliest written testimony that we know of that St Matthew, the tax collector and one of the Twelve Apostles, is the author of the Gospel we now ascribe to him, is from St Papias, bishop of Hierapolis [Pamukkale in modern Turkey; cf. Col 4:13], about AD 125.

LANGUAGE

- Whereas Jesus himself spoke in Aramaic, the Gospels, like all of the New Testament, are in Greek, the lingua franca of the eastern parts of the Roman Empire.
- However, St Papias, St Irenaeus, Origen, Eusebius and St Jerome in the early Church stated that St Matthew's original text had been in Hebrew (not meaning the classical Hebrew, but again, the Aramaic which by that time was the everyday language of the people). The Greek form of Matthew's Gospel that we possess (and which is what the Church names as divinely inspired Scripture) is, from this account, identical at least in substance to the Aramaic original from which it was derived.

RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN THE GOSPELS

- The literary relationships between the four Gospels are much debated – in particular the connections between the three 'synoptic' gospels (Matthew, Mark and Luke), that are broadly similar, with considerable shared material. (This is in contrast to [continued p. 3])

[continued from p. 1] the Gospel of John, held to have been the last written, and which is more distinctive in structure and content).

- Since the second century, Matthew's Gospel has traditionally been held as the first Gospel to be written. Modern scholars have generally favoured that Mark's was in fact the first, and that Matthew's Gospel makes use of Mark's (which is shorter). However, scholarly debate continues.
- A possibility that harmonises the majority scholarly view with the traditional ordering is that the Aramaic original composed by St Matthew was indeed first, but that the Gospel of Mark influenced aspects of the final canonical Greek version of Matthew.
- The relationship of Matthew and Luke is also debated; they share a notable amount of material that Mark does not contain. Scholars discuss whether this is because one drew from the other, or because both drew from a third source or sources, oral or written.

DATE OF COMPOSITION

- Many scholars date the canonical Greek Gospel of Matthew to the 80s of the first century. However, this estimate is influenced by various assumptions, and other scholars give good reasons for preferring an earlier dating. There is no definitively accepted conclusion.

MATTHEW: SOME DISTINCTIVE ASPECTS

- As with all the Gospels, the central theme of Matthew is of course Jesus, Son of God made man, who brings salvation from sin by his Death and Resurrection. But each Gospel gives its own unique perspective on him.
- The intended audience of Matthew seems to be Christians of Jewish background, with the Gospel containing considerable material positioning Christian faith relative to ongoing Judaism. (In view of this, Syria or Palestine is a likely place of composition.)
- Matthew highlights continuity with, and fulfilment of, the Old Testament, with many quotations of fulfilled prophecies, and sayings of Jesus emphasising the theme that he has come not to abolish the Law but to fulfil it. (cf. Mt 5:17)
- More than the other gospels, Matthew emphasises 'the Kingdom'. (We can note that Matthew mainly uses the expression 'Kingdom of heaven', whereas Mark and Luke use 'Kingdom of God' - possibly because Matthew, writing for an audience with Jewish background, avoids the holy name of God.)

Narrative episodes unique to St Matthew's Gospel:

Infancy narrative (with the dreams of St Joseph, the coming of the Magi, the slaughter of the innocents and the flight into Egypt) (1:18-25, 2:1-23); Peter walks on water (14:28-33); Judas' remorse, suicide, purchase of Field of Blood (27:3-10); Dream of Pilate's wife (27:19); Pilate washes his hands (27:24-25); Opening of tombs of patriarchs at crucifixion (27:52-53); Guarding of Jesus' tomb (27:62-66); Bribery of guards to ensure their silence (28:11-15); Appearance of the Risen Lord to the eleven Apostles on the mountain (28:16-20).

Parables unique to St Matthew's Gospel:

Kingdom of Heaven likened to field sown with weeds (13:24-30); Interpretation of the same parable (13:36-43); Net that gathered fish of all kinds (13:47-50); Treasure hidden in field, pearl of great price (13:44-46); The unforgiving servant (18:23-35); The labourers in the vineyard (20: 1-16); The two sons (21:28-32); The wise and the foolish virgins (25:1-13).
